Hiring Team

PandaDoc

Dear Hiring Team,

I'm applying for the Brand Designer, Production role at PandaDoc. High-volume creative production across digital and print formats, applied consistently within a brand system, is where I do my best work, and the scope of this role lines up directly with what I've been building across 6+ years of freelance design.

My core toolkit matches what you're looking for: advanced Figma, Illustrator, and Photoshop, with hands-on experience producing assets across paid ads, social graphics, signage, presentations, and print collateral. I've designed large-format print-ready banners, multi-piece poster series for a print production company, logo and banner packages, and marketing materials across both digital and physical channels, all while managing multiple concurrent client projects independently. That multi-project organizational discipline is something I developed running my own client workload, and it's exactly the kind of focus a high-output brand studio needs.

Brand system consistency is something I take seriously. I build identity systems with the intention that they scale: the spacing, hierarchy, color, and typography decisions I make up front are the ones that keep assets cohesive across every deliverable downstream. I'm also well-positioned on the bonus skills front. After Effects is part of my regular motion graphics workflow, and I actively use AI tools including Adobe Firefly and Claude for production acceleration, which maps directly to the efficiency focus your team is building toward.

I'm based in Las Vegas, which means no relocation and full availability to collaborate locally when needed. My portfolio is at averyemberday.com.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Avery Ember Day
